

Justices to Rule
On Ballot Case
Barring Trump

Court in Colorado Had
Disqualified Him

By ADAM LIPTAK
WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court agreed on Friday to decide whether former President Donald J. Trump is eligible for Colorado’s Republican primary ballot, thrusting the justices into a pivotal role that could alter the course of this year’s presidential election.
The sweep of the court’s ruling is likely to be broad. It will probably resolve not only whether Mr. Trump may appear on the Colorado primary ballot after the state’s top court declared that he had engaged in insurrection in his efforts to subvert the 2020 election, but it will most likely also determine his eligibility to run in the general election and to hold office at all.
Not since Bush v. Gore, the 2000 decision that handed the presidency to George W. Bush, has the Supreme Court taken such a central role in an election for the nation’s highest office.
The case will be argued on Feb. 8, and the court will probably decide it quickly. The Colorado Republican Party had urged the justices to rule by March 5, when many states, including Colorado, hold primaries.
The number of challenges to Mr. Trump’s eligibility across the country can only have added pres-

DOUG MILLS/THE NEW YORK TIMES
Donald J. Trump in August.

sure on the court to hear the Colorado case, as they underscored the need for a nationwide resolution of the question.
The case is one of several involving or affecting Mr. Trump on the court’s docket or on the horizon. An appeals court will hear arguments on Tuesday on whether he has absolute immunity from prosecution, and the losing side is all but certain to appeal. And the

BIDEN ON ATTACK The president said that Donald J. Trump was “trying to steal history.” PAGE A11
TESTING TRUMP’S CLAIM A three-judge panel will weigh in on presidents and immunity. PAGE A12

DANIEL LEAL/AGENCE FRANCE-PRESSE — GETTY IMAGES

Heavy Rains Pelt Europe
A submerged playground Friday in Buckhurst Hill, northeast of London. Flooding also occurred in regions of France and Germany.

As Trial Nears,
N.R.A. Leader
Plans to Resign

By DANNY HAKIM
On the eve of a legal battle in New York, Wayne LaPierre told board members on Friday that he would step down as the longtime chief of the National Rifle Association.
Mr. LaPierre, 74, has led the N.R.A., once one of the nation’s most prominent lobbying organizations, for more than three decades. But his resignation came as he faced his gravest challenge yet, a corruption trial in Manhattan amid a legal showdown with New York’s attorney general, Letitia James.
Jury selection has already begun, and Mr. LaPierre has been in the courtroom for some of it. Opening arguments were scheduled for early next week.
Mr. LaPierre’s resignation, which is effective on Jan. 31, did not stem from a deal with the attorney general’s office, and Ms. James said on Friday that she expected the trial to go forward. Mr. LaPierre’s longtime spokesman, Andrew Arulanandam, will become the N.R.A.’s interim chief executive. The development was first reported by The Wall Street Journal.
“With pride in all that we have accomplished, I am announcing my resignation from the N.R.A.,” Mr. LaPierre said in a statement.

Continued on Page A16

Biden Squeezed by Both Sides on Immigration

By MICHAEL D. SHEAR and MIRIAM JORDAN
WASHINGTON — President Biden is under growing pressure to curb record numbers of migrants crossing into the United States — not just from the usual Republican critics, but also from Democratic mayors and governors in cities thousands of miles from the border.
What used to be a clear-cut, ideological fight between Democrats and Republicans has become a bipartisan demand for action, and some of the most intense pressure on Mr. Biden is coming from places like Boston, Denver, Chicago and New York, where leaders in the president’s own party are issuing cries for help.
Publicly, the Democratic politicians have described mounting crises in their cities. Privately, they are in almost daily contact with Tom Perez, director of the White House Office of Intergovernmental Affairs, and other administration officials. For the most part, they are not calling for the kind of severe border restrictions that Republicans are demanding, but they want help with overflowing migrant encampments, packed shelters and busted budgets.
The intraparty pressure has turned the politics of immigration upside down at the beginning of a campaign year. And it has increased the likelihood that Mr. Biden and Democratic lawmakers will approve immigration concessions to Republicans that would daily. In Boston, migrants have camped out at the airport. In New York, more than 164,500 migrants have poured into shelters since April 2022, with many still living in one of the 215 hotels, converted office buildings or tent camps set up to accommodate them.

Feeling Pressure From Democratic Mayors

“It’s both a humanitarian and fiscal crisis,” said Mike Johnston, the Democratic mayor of Denver.

Continued on Page A10

KENNY HOLSTON/THE NEW YORK TIMES

This child’s family was stopped Wednesday in Eagle Pass, Texas.

PANDYA ET AL.

Galaxies in their infancy, as captured by the James Webb Space Telescope, appear to be elongated.

The Early Universe May Have Gone Bananas

By DENNIS OVERBYE
What does a newborn galaxy look like?
For the longest time, many astrophysicists and cosmologists have assumed that newborn galaxies would look like the orbs and spidery discs familiar in the modern universe.
But according to an analysis of new images from the James Webb Space Telescope, baby galaxies

Images Defy Theory on Newborn Galaxies

were neither eggs nor discs. They were bananas. Or pickles, or cigars, or surfboards — choose your own metaphor. That is the tentative conclusion of a team of astronomers who re-examined images of some 4,000 newborn galaxies observed by Webb at the dawn of time.

“This is both a surprising and unexpected result, though there were already hints of it with Hubble,” said Viraj Pandya, a postdoctoral fellow at Columbia University, referring to the Hubble Space Telescope. He is the lead author of a paper soon to be published in the Astrophysical Journal under the provocative title “Galaxies Going Bananas.”
Continued on Page A15

JOSEPH LELYVELD, 1937-2024

Pulitzer Winner Led The Times Through Growth

By ROBERT D. McFADDEN
Joseph Lelyveld, a former executive editor and foreign correspondent for The New York Times, who won the 1986 Pulitzer Prize for nonfiction for his book “Move Your Shadow: South Africa, Black and White,” died on Friday at his home in Manhattan. He was 86.
The cause was complications of Parkinson’s disease, said Janny Scott, his partner of 19 years and a former Times reporter.
Cerebral and introspective, Mr. Lelyveld was one of the most respected journalists in America for nearly four decades, a globe-trotting adventurer who reported from Washington, Congo, India, Hong Kong, Johannesburg and

Joseph Lelyveld

London, winning acclaim for his prolific and perceptive articles.
Coming home, he rose up The Times’s editorial pyramid to its pinnacle, the executive editorship, arguably the most powerful post in American journalism. In his seven years at the helm, from 1994 to 2001, The Times climbed to record levels of revenue and profits, expanded its national and international readerships, introduced color photographs to the front page, created new sections, and ushered in the digital age with a Times website and round-the-clock news operations.

Mr. Lelyveld presided over one of the world’s largest and most influential news organizations — with 1,200 reporters and editors in New York, Washington and an archipelago of 16 regional, 11 national and 26 foreign bureaus — all the while taking strides to diversify the staff’s racial and gender

Continued on Page A20

OBITUARIES A17, 20

Jazz Missionary and Professor
Willie Ruff, a master of the French horn, toured the world and taught music at Yale. He was 92. PAGE A17

Actress in ‘Mary Poppins’
In a more-than-60-year career, Glynis Johns also won a Tony for “A Little Night Music.” She was 100. PAGE A17

NATIONAL A9-16

Targeting Higher Education
With two prominent university presidents resigning, House Republicans are planning an expansive inquiry into academia in America. PAGE A11

Strict Abortion Rule Upheld
The Supreme Court reinstated Idaho’s statute, but it also agreed to hear an appeal of the case. PAGE A14

INTERNATIONAL A4-8

Planning Britain’s Vote
Prime Minister Rishi Sunak signaled that citizens will go to the polls in the fall, mirroring the U.S. election. PAGE A5

BUSINESS B1-5

China Cashing In on War
The war in Ukraine has led Russia to switch from the West to Beijing for the purchases of everything from cars to computer chips. PAGE B1

Apple Antitrust Suit Is Likely
A Justice Department investigation is taking aim at the company’s tactics to guard the iPhone’s dominance. PAGE B1

THIS WEEKEND

Hesitantly Going Hollywood
For Lily Gladstone, awards attention has taken some adjustment. A special edition on the Oscars in Arts & Leisure.

ARTS C1-6

A Bounce House Divided
Nile Harris’s play “This House Is Not a Home” uses an unconventional set to convey American divisions. PAGE C1

Cinema’s Fake Noses, Rated
Bradley Cooper’s “Maestro” sniffer inspires a look back. Below, Steve Martin in “Roxanne.” PAGE C5

SPORTS B6-9

Paths to N.F.L. Playoffs
There are 11 teams in the running for five spots. Here is how Week 18 results will affect their chances. PAGES B8-9

A Case for Pasadena
College football could build some familiarity by having the Rose Bowl determine the champion each year. PAGE B7

OPINION A18-19

Adam Grant PAGE A18

