

“All the News
That’s Fit to Print”

The New York Times

THE WEATHER
Today, sunny, light winds, high 77.
Tonight, partly cloudy, light winds, low 63. Tomorrow, partly cloudy, a couple of showers, light winds, high
75. Weather map is on Page B8.

VOL. CLXXV No. 60,917

© 2026 The New York Times Company

TUESDAY, JUNE 16, 2026

Prices in Canada may be higher

$4.00

TODD HEISLER/THE NEW YORK TIMES

Turning Traffic Stops Into Immigration Arrests
The Trump administration has enlisted hundreds of state and local law enforcement agencies in its mass deportation effort. Page A14.

RUSSIANS EXPLOIT GAP OVER UKRAINE

Missile Swarms Overrun Depleted Air Defenses

This article is by Nicholas Kulich, Kim Barker, Siobhán O’Grady and Lara Jakes.

Russia’s ballistic-missile attacks against Ukraine have grown in ferocity and magnitude in recent weeks because Russian military planners are exploiting one of Ukraine’s greatest weaknesses: The Ukrainian military does not have enough Patriot missile interceptors to keep up with the bar-rages.

Air-defense units around the country are stuck making impossible calculations. Salvos can now include more than 1,000 drones and dozens of missiles. Exhausted crew members who have at times spent 24 hours glued to the radar with little food or sleep are overwhelmed by the much faster ballistic missiles they must try to knock down with their remaining interceptors.

That is, if they have any left in their launchers at all. In interviews with Ukrainian military officials, Western diplomats, security experts and frontline air-defense officers, the message was the same. The deliveries of Patriot interceptors have not kept pace with the drastically rising number of Russian ballistic missiles.

The technologically advanced interceptors are time-consuming to manufacture, and in a world at war, the global supply of them is overextended as never before. The conflict with Iran has unleashed an urgent demand in a host of countries along the Persian Gulf.

In addition, in Ukraine’s huge land mass, a dwindling stockpile is stretched even thinner as air-defense units try to cover the vast terrain the Russians might attack with their escalating salvos.

“A goalkeeper is standing in the goal, and suddenly 10 balls are flying at him at once. He cannot catch all of them,” said Col. Yuriy Ihnat, a Ukrainian Air Force spokesman. “He can catch as many as he has hands and feet, right?”

Every miscalculation carries the burden of civilian lives in danger. Last month, 24 people died when a ballistic missile struck an apartment building in Kyiv, the

Continued on Page A6

Under Trump, Flutes Tap Out. Fighters Move In.

By JULIA JACOBS
and EMMANUEL MORGAN

WASHINGTON — After an evening of Gershwin and Copland, the musicians of the National Symphony Orchestra stood for the applause of an audience diminished by more than a year of turbulence at the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts.

Many onstage and in the audience worried that Saturday’s performance could be the group’s last at the Kennedy Center for the foreseeable future.

The next night, only a mile away, shirtless fighters walked out of the White House and into a mammoth caged Octagon built on the South Lawn, filled with 4,000-some screaming fans.

Bouts at White House Signal Shift in D.C.’s Cultural Scene

In a weekend of celebrations connected to the 250th anniversary of the United States’ founding, President Trump moved the nexus of culture in Washington from concert hall to cage match.

During the president’s second term, his efforts to shape cultural institutions in the capital have often been defined by what, in his view, should be eliminated.

Mr. Trump asked for an end to “woke” at the Kennedy Center, staging a takeover of the arts institution before deciding to close it for two years of renovations. At the Smithsonian, he has called for a prohibition on exhibits that “degrade shared American values.”

But it was the Ultimate Fighting Championship spectacle that vividly displayed the president’s singular view of a night of entertainment in Washington.

Continued on Page A13

KENNY HOLSTON/THE NEW YORK TIMES

Diego Lopes, left, triumphed on Sunday during a U.F.C. event hosted by the president. The National Symphony Orchestra may be absent from the Kennedy Center for the foreseeable future.

CAROLINE GUTMAN FOR THE NEW YORK TIMES

In a Changed Quebec, Embracing Assisted Death

By NORIMITSU ONISHI

LANAUDIÈRE, Quebec — The wood-paneled wall, surrounded by surfaces in muted white and blue, gave the room the feel of a boutique hotel. A lone bird flew near an iceberg in a framed photograph above a coffee maker, a stereo system and a landline.

But the sofas and armchairs were oriented not toward the wall-mounted TV, but toward the medical bed at the center of the room. A large plastic container for used syringes hinted further at the place’s purpose: a facility for medically assisted dying.

Quick Increase in Rate Brings Call for Pause

The room was inside a new palliative care center in Lanaudière, a region of Quebec where 13 out of 100 people die through assisted death. That is the highest rate in the province, itself the world leader in assisted deaths, according to Canadian and Quebec government reports. Built with money from private donors and run by the provincial government, the center reflected two elements that have propelled Quebec to the top: assisted death’s integration into the public health care system, and its broad public support.

Since Quebec pioneered as-

Continued on Page A7

Wary Optimism Greet News of U.S.-Iran Deal; Details Aren’t Disclosed

NEWS ANALYSIS

Winding Down War With Goals Unmet

By ERICA L. GREEN and ZOLAN KANNO-YOUNGS

GENEVA — Almost immediately after striking a deal with Iran, President Trump appeared eager to take a victory lap.

He trumpeted that the agreement would open the Strait of Hormuz, a vital waterway for the world’s energy supplies whose stalled ship traffic has rattled the global economy. He told The New York Times that his efforts had saved Israel from nuclear extinction and made the Middle East safer. It all gave him a key win as he traveled to France for the Group of 7 summit, where he will meet with European leaders who have criticized his approach to the war.

Despite Mr. Trump’s grandiose claims, the agreement has not yet achieved the core goals he laid out three months ago for launching the U.S.-Israeli war against Iran.

Back then, Mr. Trump said the United States intended to “annihilate” Iran’s military capabilities, abolish its nuclear ambitions, topple its theocratic leadership and liberate its people, whom he encouraged to take over their government when the fighting had stopped. Just one week after the strikes started, he said Iran’s only path to a deal was an “unconditional surrender.”

Mr. Trump publicly declared victory on Sunday mainly based on solving a problem of his own making, in miscalculating Iran’s ability to choke off the Strait of Hormuz. Mr. Trump asserted on Truth Social that he had authorized the toll-free opening of the crucial waterway, which would essentially restore the prewar status quo, and celebrated that the global energy markets would rebound.

“Ships of the World, start your engines,” he wrote. “Let the oil flow!”

The latest framework, which has not yet been publicly released and is expected to be signed in Geneva on Friday, is a capstone to three months in

Continued on Page A8

Energy Prices Fall — 60-Day Halt Until Pact Is Finished

This article is by Zolan Kanno-Youngs, Erica L. Green, Max Bearak and Lara Jakes.

GENEVA — World leaders on Monday cautiously welcomed a new cease-fire deal and diplomatic path to ending the U.S. war with Iran, as oil prices tumbled, fighting in Lebanon appeared to ease and Iranians expressed wary relief that a conflict that has killed thousands could soon end.

No text of the agreement was published by either side, and American and Iranian officials have made conflicting statements about what it contains. But it was clear that its initial phase aimed to end military attacks and allow ships to once again sail freely through the Strait of Hormuz, a vital conduit for the world’s energy supplies that Iran effectively shut down after the war began.

REUTERS

The initial phase was aimed at opening the Strait of Hormuz.

Since the United States and Israel started strikes in Iran on Feb. 28, the war has not produced the results President Trump vowed to achieve: destroying Tehran’s military capabilities, eliminating its regional proxies, abolishing its nuclear ambitions and toppling its theocratic leadership.

But returning the strait to its prewar status, when it was open to commercial shipping, could begin the process of lowering high gas prices in the United States that have become a political liability for Mr. Trump and Republicans heading into the midterm elections. Experts cautioned that it

Continued on Page A8

SIDELINED The U.S.-Iran framework appears to omit some of the most important provisions that Israel wanted. News Analysis. PAGE A9

SAFETY CONCERNS Shipowners praised a deal to reopen the strait, but said they needed security guarantees before transit resumed. PAGE B1

Iranians, Weary From War, Find Little Joy in World Cup

This article is by Sanam Mahoozi, Shirin Hakim and Yeganeh Torbati.

After a year that brought Iranians two devastating wars, mass protests crushed by the government and an imploding economy, Iran’s appearance in the World Cup is doing little to cheer people up or to unite the country.

Some Iranians view the national soccer team as representatives of a repressive government. Others see the players as a source of pride that should transcend politics. But the overall feeling, expressed in interviews with Iranians across the political spectrum in recent days, is one of exhaustion and jadedness.

Iranians’ problems are so dire, it appears, that even seeing their national team play at the highest levels of an enormously popular sport will not deliver much-needed distraction. “People don’t feel pride anymore,” said Iman, 38, a Tehran resident who said he would not be supporting the Iranian team. Like others interviewed by The New York Times, he declined to be fully identified for fear of government reprisal.

“People have so many problems and are dealing with so many challenges that this soccer thing is really not a big deal for them,” he added.

Another Tehran resident, Iraj, 48, said he would be cheering on the national team. But, he said, “everyone is so occupied with other things that soccer really doesn’t unite.”

Iran’s first match was set to take place in Los Angeles on Monday night, against New Zealand.

A year ago this week, Iran was under bombardment as Israel car-

Continued on Page A9

INTERNATIONAL A4-10

Partying at Taiwan’s Temples

One site, nearly reclaimed by the forest, draws hundreds of people looking for a different kind of night out. PAGE A10

Trump Arrives for G7 Talks

The president has lashed out at European leaders over their refusal to support the U.S. war with Iran. PAGE A7

ARTS C1-6

Slayyyter’s Rowdy Ride

Trying to maintain her perspective amid a breakout summer, the singer discusses her career arc and why most pop-star formats didn’t suit her. PAGE C1

David Hockney’s Los Angeles

He came to symbolize the city’s culture, with his swimming pool paintings and embrace of gay liberation. PAGE C1

OBITUARIES B11-12

Big-Screen Costume Designer

Albert Wolsky, who won two Oscars, created Olivia Newton-John’s ensemble in “Grease.” He was 95. PAGE B12

NATIONAL A11-17, 20

Water Tensions Are Rising

Legal battles loom for Western states that depend on supplies from a dwindling Colorado River. PAGE A11

Newsom Says He’s a Target

The California governor accused the president of ordering an investigation into him and his wife. PAGE A16

SCIENCE TIMES D1-8

A.I. vs. the Math Whizzes

A team of mathematicians spent years trying to solve a vexing problem, then they were scooped by artificial intelligence. That raises concerns for humans just starting out in the field. PAGE D1

H.I.V. Drug Lands in Zambia

Lenacapavir, which protects people from H.I.V. infection with twice-yearly shots, is arriving in a country where the health system has been hollowed out by cuts in American aid. PAGE D1

OPINION A18-19

David French

PAGE A19

SPORTS B6-10

Piling On the Happiness

The Carolina Hurricanes, a team of family spirit and poignant stories, are on top of the hockey world after winning the Stanley Cup. PAGE B6

