

HEATHER AINSWORTH FOR THE NEW YORK TIMES

Files from a Cornell inquiry shed new light on a 2024 sexual assault case involving a former student and seven fraternity members.

Former Cornell Student’s Shame Turned Into Anguish

This article is by Debra Kamin, Matt Flegenheimer, Amy Julia Harris and Sharon Otterman.

In October 2024, about a week after a Chi Phi fraternity party at Cornell University, the sophomore who would come to be known as Jane Doe was milling around an online forum about Greek life when she encountered a post that stopped her cold. “Are Chi Phi brothers Crips or Bloods because I hear they have been doing hell Gang Banging?” someone had written. “They do drugs and gang r*ped a sophomore,” another user said. “Report them.” Since the evening that began on Oct. 19, 2024, Jane Doe had recounted the night’s events to her roommates without identifying herself as a rape victim. She had exchanged friendly text messages with men she would later accuse of assault. She had heard uncharitable appraisals of herself from undergraduate gossips. Then she read the words. “That’s the first time I had ever heard the narrative change that I wasn’t a whore and that I was assaulted,” Jane Doe told investigators, according to documents from a university review of the accusations obtained by The New York Times. Those records, which have not been previously reported, help illuminate a case that has horrified the nation and plunged one of its elite institutions into crisis. They shed light on the crucial three-week period between the fraternity party and Jane Doe’s decision to take her story to the campus police, accusing multiple fraternity brothers of sexual assault and alleging that she was coerced into taking ketamine. The bare facts of what happened after she made her accusations are by now well known: The Tompkins County, N.Y., district attorney, Matthew Van Houten, reviewed her complaint and declined to bring criminal charges, saying there was not sufficient evidence to do so. Jane Doe filed a complaint that prompted at least a dozen hearings by the school’s Title IX committee, which is supposed to ensure compliance with federal civil rights laws. On Sept. 16, Jane Doe also filed a lawsuit against seven men, accusing them of sexual assault. Lawyers for at least three of the accused men have broadly denied criminal wrongdoing; others have not yet made public statements. What had not been known publicly, until now, were the detailed filings collected during the private

Records Show Woman Had Come to Believe ‘I Was Assaulted’

Continued on Page A20

ERIK MARMOR/GETTY IMAGES

Asaf Rajuan, one of the passengers credited with helping to save a FlyDubai plane Wednesday after the co-pilot stabbed the pilot.

Questions on Co-Pilot’s Motive After Midair Attack in Cockpit

This article is by Isabel Kershner, Leo Sands and Thomas Fuller.

JERUSALEM — Investigators on Thursday were trying to determine what motivated the co-pilot on a flight from Dubai to Tel Aviv to stab the pilot, a midair cockpit attack that nearly resulted in catastrophe. Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu of Israel suggested in a television interview on Thursday that the co-pilot, whom Israeli officials have identified as an Omani citizen, was ideologically motivated. “We know that he underwent Islamist radical indoctrination,” Mr. Netanyahu told Fox News, saying that investigators had learned this from the man’s “personal information.” He did not provide further details, and the man’s identity had not been made public. In a video released by Mr. Netanyahu’s office on Thursday, Yaniv Hayoun, an Israeli passenger said to be the first to grab the co-pilot, recounted him saying “Kill me! Kill me!” in English. Mr. Hayoun said he took that to mean that “he had failed in his mission and preferred to die.” Mr. Hayoun, who put the attacker in a chokehold and dragged him out of the cockpit, appears to be the only passenger on the

Continued on Page A6

Democrats Sent Plea by Latinos On Texas Race

By REID J. EPSTEIN

WASHINGTON — As polls suggest that Gina Hinojosa, a Democrat, is competitive in her campaign to become the first Latina governor of the usually reliably Republican state of Texas, a growing number of prominent Latino officials are angry that she is not getting more help from the party. Now there are veiled threats that if the Democratic Governors Association fails to invest in her bid, some Latino leaders could withhold their support from the group’s chairman, Gov. Andy Beshear of Kentucky, should he, as expected, run for president in 2028. “We are asking you to invest in a competitive race with the largest Latino electorate in the country following an election cycle where Republicans made alarming inroads with Latinos,” read a letter more than 70 Latino officials sent Wednesday to Mr. Beshear at the D.G.A. Ms. Hinojosa’s allies have recruited a cadre of officials, including some from the early-voting states of Nevada and New Mexico, to push Mr. Beshear to direct the group to spend $10 million on her campaign against Gov. Greg Abbott, the incumbent Republican who is seeking a fourth term. “All Democrats would do better when and if we help Gina Hinojosa win Texas,” said one of the Demo-

Continued on Page A11

HE SAID Men accused in the assault case gave varying accounts of the night in question. PAGE A21
N.Y. LAW A law makes it harder to prosecute cases when sex assault victims drank willingly. PAGE A20

In Tennessee, Hold Is Placed On Executions

Inmate Still Alive After Two Doses of Drug

By EMILY COCHRANE

NASHVILLE — Tennessee has called off its remaining planned execution in 2026 and will review how it puts prisoners to death after an inmate, Christa Pike, survived two doses of a lethal drug in the state’s second botched attempt at capital punishment this year. It was the second time in five years that Gov. Bill Lee, a Republican, had paused executions because of questions over the effectiveness of the state’s lethal injections. In 2022, he ordered a review after prison officials failed to properly test the drugs before an execution. Mr. Lee, speaking to reporters on Thursday, called the bungled execution on Wednesday a “tragedy” and said “it shouldn’t have happened.” He said that there would not be another attempt to execute Ms. Pike this year. “It’s deeply disturbing to me that that has happened in this state — the people deserve better than that,” Mr. Lee said. Mr. Lee also ordered a third-party review of the execution attempt, during which Ms. Pike remained alive, breathing and snoring for nearly an hour before she was taken to a hospital. The remaining execution for this year, for a man convicted of murdering a friend, had been scheduled for December. Mr. Lee earlier issued a reprieve until next May for Tony Carruthers, another death-row inmate whose execution was canceled after medical staff members failed to find a vein. Ms. Pike, 50, was hospitalized Wednesday evening after it became apparent that she was still conscious after two doses of the lethal drug pentobarbital. One of her lawyers, Randy Spivey, said on Thursday that he was told she was in critical condition, “receiving lifesaving care.” Mr. Spivey called on the governor to commute Ms. Pike’s sentence to life in prison. Mr. Lee previously denied such a request. Mr. Spivey said that it took an hour on Wednesday to attempt to establish an intravenous line in Ms. Pike. He said he counted seven needles used in her left arm

Continued on Page A19

TWO TITANS OF A.I. OPENING WALLETS FOR MIDTERM BIDS

EFFORT TO SWAY RACES

OpenAI and Anthropic Work Quietly to Try to Shape Rules

This article is by Catie Edmondson, Matt Zdun and Daniel Wood.

Artificial intelligence companies racing to shape how the federal government might regulate their industry amid rising safety and economic concerns are spending heavily to influence which candidates make it to Congress. A New York Times analysis of federal campaign finance data shows that the political groups aligned with the two leading A.I. developers, OpenAI and Anthropic, have quietly but decisively intervened in key 2026 races, spending on campaign advertising and outreach to voters to the tune of $55.7 million. So far, the spending has been concentrated almost entirely in the primaries. The two groups have spent $52.6 million on safe seats — those that are unlikely to change party hands but that often feature intense intraparty contests. The big A.I. players have also spent more heavily for Democrats than Republicans. They have bolstered candidates who align with their agendas, helped defeat those they see as hostile to them and ingratiated themselves with front-runners who are likely to be in positions of power in the next Congress to make decisions critical to their bottom lines. But with voters quickly souring on their industry — including demanding that lawmakers do more to regulate A.I. and halt or mitigate the proliferation of data centers — they have taken pains to obscure their involvement. With few exceptions, they have intervened without ever explicitly mentioning A.I. or data centers in the TV and digital ads they have purchased. (The Times has sued OpenAI and Microsoft, claiming copyright infringement of news content related to A.I. systems. The two companies have denied those claims.)

Continued on Page A11

175 | THE NEW YORK TIMES AT 175

HENRY LEUTWYLER FOR THE NEW YORK TIMES

THESE OBJECTS HAVE STORIES OF THEIR OWN

- 1. A last-minute email.
- 2. A can opener.
- 3. A special delivery.
- 4. A headlamp.
- 5. A poncho liner.
- 6. An unpublished front page.
- 7. Credit cards.
- 8. A chunk of a car.
- 9. A Geiger counter.
- 10. Plague protection.

Colleagues discuss items that have shaped coverage in The Times, including Dean Baquet on the “Madam President” front page that never was. PAGES A12-15

INTERNATIONAL A4-8
What I Saw in Iraq
From the start of the American invasion in 2003, there were warning signs, our correspondent recalls. PAGE A8

Migrant Agreement Scuttled
The French government soured on the year-old “one in, one out” reciprocal deal with Britain. PAGE A4

NATIONAL A9-21
Better ‘Than Any Doctor’
Health Secretary Robert F. Kennedy Jr. said that A.I. could offer patients well-informed second opinions and “free us from medical tyranny.” PAGE A16

Good’s Family Sues ICE Agent
Renee Good’s fatal shooting set off protests during the Trump administration’s immigration operation early this year in Minnesota. PAGE A17

Wave of Trouble on the Way
El Niño is sending an enormous pulse of wave energy that will soon hit Southern California and continue north, raising threats from the sea. PAGE A9

BUSINESS B1-6
A Ban on Diesel Exports?
President Trump is threatening just that, which would be a “tremendous shock and blow.” PAGE B1

High Risk, but Low Pay
A recent shooting at a mosque focused attention on security guards. Unions want better compensation. PAGE B1

SPORTS B7-10
76ers’ Radioactive Experiment
With LeBron James and Jaylen Brown joining Joel Embiid and Tyrese Maxey, Philadelphia has assembled a roster teeming with talent and personality — plus chemistry questions. PAGE B7

Knicks Inspire the Yankees
“We’ve got to keep the winning going in New York,” said Aaron Judge, who hopes to end his own team’s 17-year championship drought after securing a wild-card spot in the playoffs. PAGE B9

OPINION A22-23
Jessica Grose PAGE A23

WEEKEND ARTS C1-12
In Touch With a Master
Jamie Wyeth makes a pilgrimage to Maine, to view rare works by Winslow Homer, a potent influence on three generations of Wyeth artists. PAGE C8

