

Red Cross volunteers lowering the coffin of an Ebola victim into a grave in Ituri Province, Democratic Republic of Congo, this month.

Agencies Balk At Master List Of Every Spy

This article is by Devlin Barrett, William K. Rashbaum and Julian E. Barnes.

WASHINGTON — The Trump administration is demanding that American intelligence officials turn over the names of all foreign espionage targets, including suspected spies and potential recruits, to create a master list that some officials fear will be misused or compromise operations, according to people familiar with the matter.

The effort by the Office of the Director of National Intelligence has intensified in recent months, frustrating counterparts at the F.B.I. and the C.I.A., who are skeptical of the claims that a master list is necessary to avoid inadvertent conflicts between agencies and to better track foreign intelligence threats in real time. The office was established after the attacks on Sept. 11, 2001, to streamline coordination among the intelligence agencies.

Senior counterintelligence officials at the F.B.I. and the C.I.A. have so far resisted those demands, the people familiar with the matter said, and the effort has been mostly unsuccessful. Officials still cannot agree on the most basic details, including how a list of what are known as foreign intelligence threat actors would be created, maintained and kept secure, the people said.

The clash also reflects the strained relationship between the Office of the Director of National Intelligence and the F.B.I. and the C.I.A. after the former director, Tulsi Gabbard, pursued the president's priorities, including shrinking the office's work force and scrutinizing allegations of election fraud based on flimsy or unfounded claims. With Bill Pulte, a housing official who has no prior intelligence experience, serving as acting director, officials are increasingly wary of how the office might handle such secrets.

For the F.B.I., such a master list of espionage targets would include those the bureau wants to investigate and perhaps someday arrest. For the C.I.A., it would include a significant number of potential assets.

Some current and former intelligence officials fear that assembling identifying details about some of the most sensitive cases may fatally compromise long-running intelligence investigations

Continued on Page A17

Twin Threats to Aid Workers: Ebola, and Anger

By DECLAN WALSH

BUNIA, Democratic Republic of Congo — In an instant, the funeral erupted into chaos. Furious mourners threw punches and stones, breaking car windows and chasing after the Red Cross workers they accused of bringing Ebola to their town.

In the melee, Ramazani Bokwandela, 61, a Red Cross volunteer, dove into the bushes. Only a few weeks earlier, he had been selling bottles of gasoline for $1 from his roadside stall. Now, he was at the hard edge of efforts to contain the surging Ebola outbreak scything through his corner of the Democratic Republic of Congo — and he feared it was going to cost him his life.

Facing Risks of Disease and Also Attack by Untrusting People

"I thought I was dead," he said. But Mr. Bokwandela, who had raised 15 children and escaped bouts of conflict here in northeastern Congo, knew a thing about improvising. Plucking a snail from a leaf, he used its shell as a razor and sliced off the sleeves of his Red Cross tunic, he said, casting away its famous emblem. Then he snatched a clump of plants, to disguise himself as a farmer, and stole away from the fighting.

His fellow Red Cross volunteers were not so fortunate. Four of them were hospitalized after being badly beaten at the funeral. Yet, three days later, Mr. Bokwandela was back at work, risking his life to ensure the kind of safe burials that are so pivotal to containing the virus.

"I'm on the front line against this disease," he said, wearing a new Red Cross tunic. "That's my duty."

Volunteers like Mr. Bokwandela are the ordinary heroes of Congo's Ebola outbreak. More than a month into the crisis, the chronic shortages of even the most basic supplies that blighted the early response are starting to ease. International aid is beginning to flow

Continued on Page A7

VINCENT ALBAN FOR THE NEW YORK TIMES

Rowing and Roaring

At World Cup games, Norway fans have been pulling together with their Viking-inspired cheer. Colombia and other Latin American teams are popular attractions in South Florida. Pages B6, 8.

SCOTT MCINTYRE FOR THE NEW YORK TIMES

A.I. Makes Voters Wince. Out of View, Campaigns Scamper to Reap Its Benefits.

By STUART A. THOMPSON

YORK, Pa. — On a recent afternoon, Alex Bond was standing outside his home in York, ticking off the political issues of greatest concern to him. After gas prices and taxes, he named data centers — the massive warehouses that consume enormous amounts of energy to make artificial intelligence function.

"A.I. is terrible," said Mr. Bond, a 29-year-old account manager at a company that provides ankle monitors. "And it's probably going to kill us all."

He was speaking with a pair of political canvassers, sent to Pennsylvania's competitive 10th Congressional District at the recommendation of Janelle Stelson, the Democratic candidate, as part of an old-fashioned door-knocking operation.

What Mr. Bond didn't realize was that his comments would soon be processed inside one of those very A.I. data centers.

After their chat ended, one of the canvassers, who was volunteering with Swing Left, a Democratic political group, recapped what Mr. Bond said into a phone app. That memo was then analyzed by an A.I. tool alongside hundreds of other memos from similar door-knocks happening around the district.

The A.I. tool synthesized what voters like Mr. Bond were saying, feeding reports that the campaign could use to tailor its messages and turn persuadable voters like him into supporters.

"Everything a person is saying is a data point," said Violet Kopp, one of the canvassers and Swing Left's organizing program manager for the East Coast.

Republican and Democratic candidates and strategists who were once wary of A.I. tools or overwhelmed by them are now

Continued on Page A14

JUSTICES BROADEN PRESIDENTS' SWAY OVER REGULATORS

Expansion of Power to Fire at Will Has Big Exception: Federal Reserve

By ANN E. MARIMOW

WASHINGTON — In a major expansion of presidential authority, the Supreme Court cleared the way on Monday for President Trump to fire independent government regulators despite federal laws meant to protect their jobs. But the justices carved out an exception for the Federal Reserve, preventing the president from immediately removing one governor, Lisa D. Cook, from the powerful central bank.

The court's 6-to-3 ruling to broadly allow the firings, with the three liberal justices dissenting, represented a significant shift in power from Congress to the president, and could drastically change the federal government's structure by giving the president more control over independent agencies.

The case tested whether Mr. Trump could oust Rebecca Kelly Slaughter, a Democratic member of the Federal Trade Commission, simply because she did not align with his agenda, despite a law that says the president can remove commissioners only for "inefficiency, neglect of duty or malfeasance in office."

But the decision has implications for more than two dozen agencies — including those charged with protecting consumers, workers, the environment and nuclear safety — that have traditionally been insulated from presidential control.

In a social media post, Mr. Trump celebrated what he called a "BIG WIN," adding that it was a "Historic and Unprecedented Ruling, one of the most important ever given with respect to Presidential Powers."

In a separate decision, however, the court voted 5 to 4 to block the president from ousting Ms. Cook.

While the ruling decided a narrow procedural question, the majority opinion pointed to the uniquely independent nature of the central bank.

Former top Fed and Treasury officials and Ms. Cook's legal team

Continued on Page A18

TIERNY L. CROSS FOR THE NEW YORK TIMES

The 6-to-3 decision affirmed the Fed's independence.

Mississippi Law On Mail Ballots Upheld by Court

By ABBIE VANSICKLE

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court on Monday upheld Mississippi's grace period for late-arriving mail-in ballots, rejecting a push by the Trump administration to invalidate a state law.

The ruling means Mississippi's law, which allows elections officials to count ballots postmarked by Election Day and received up to five business days later, will remain in place, at least through the midterm elections.

In a 5-to-4 vote, Chief Justice John G. Roberts Jr. and Justice Amy Coney Barrett joined the court's three liberals in supporting the state law. The majority found that nothing in federal statutes required ballots to be received by Election Day.

Although the decision focused on a challenge to Mississippi's law, the ruling appeared to leave in place similar laws in at least 18 other states and territories, including 2026 battleground districts in Nevada and California, in a blow to Republican efforts to roll back mail-in balloting.

It is also a defeat for President Trump, who has long criticized voting by mail, falsely claiming that the practice is open to fraud and helped lead to his defeat in the 2020 presidential election.

Continued on Page A19

Trump Request In Carroll Case Denied Review

By ABBIE VANSICKLE and BENJAMIN WEISER

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court on Monday declined a request by President Trump to review a $5 million civil judgment against him after a jury found in 2023 that he sexually abused and defamed the writer E. Jean Carroll.

The announcement by the justices did not include any reasoning, and no public dissents were noted.

A second case that arose out of Ms. Carroll's allegations also could be headed to the Supreme Court. In January 2024, a separate jury ordered Mr. Trump to pay Ms. Carroll $83.3 million in damages for defaming her in 2019 after she accused him of a decades-old rape.

Lawyers for Mr. Trump have said they also plan to ask that the justices hear that case.

Still, Monday's decision is a major blow to Mr. Trump and is most likely the end of his legal efforts to contest the jury verdict finding that he assaulted Ms. Carroll in the mid-1990s in a department store dressing room.

The Supreme Court's announcement came after the court ruled in February that the presi-

Continued on Page A19

INTERNATIONAL A4-12

For Leverage, Iran Risks War

Tehran sees its control over the Strait of Hormuz as critical in talks with the U.S., and seems willing to risk the cease-fire to maintain that power. PAGE A6

Rescue Effort Grows Desperate

The possibility of finding more survivors of last week's earthquakes continued to fuel the search in Venezuela. PAGE A10

OBITUARIES A21, 24

Painter Who Elevated Comics

Jerry Moriarty called himself a "paintoonist," and his work drew comparisons to poetry. He was 88. PAGE A24

ARTS C1-6

Teen Angst to Sapphic Success

Hayley Kiyoko has reinvented her song "Girls Like Girls" as a best-selling YA novel and a new theatrical film. PAGE C1

The Year's Best Films, So Far

Now is as good a time as any to catch up on movies you may have missed. Our critics have suggestions. PAGE C1

NATIONAL A13-20

A Push to Install Loyalists

Behind the scenes, the White House went to great lengths to sway a board whose purpose is to protect federal workers from unfair firings. PAGE A16

A Job Paying $22,000 an Hour

A law intended to end surprise medical billing has led to large paydays for some surgical assistants. PAGE A13

SPORTS B6-9

Echoes of Glory on Grass

As Venus and Serena Williams return to Wimbledon, they are adding to legacies that go far beyond its courts. PAGE B8

SCIENCE TIMES D1-8

No Cure, but Years to Live

Stage 4 cancer patients, like Kate Dietrick, above, are now living longer, leaving them in a sort of limbo. PAGE D1

Ebola Outbreak's Big Mystery

Scientists believe the Bundibugyo virus persists in an animal species, but they have yet to identify which one. PAGE D1

BUSINESS B1-5

Unhooking NBCUniversal

The media arm will be separated from Comcast's cable and internet business, ending a long union. PAGE B1

A.I. Riches Widen a Divide

Demand is driving stocks and exports in South Korea and Taiwan, leaving the rest of the economy behind. PAGE B1

OPINION A22-23

The Editorial Board

PAGE A22

