"All the News That's Fit to Print"

The New York Times

THE WEATHER
Today, patchy fog early, more sun than clouds, high 71. Tonight, partly cloudy, low 59. Tomorrow, thickening clouds early, afternoon showers, high 68. Weather map, Page A20.

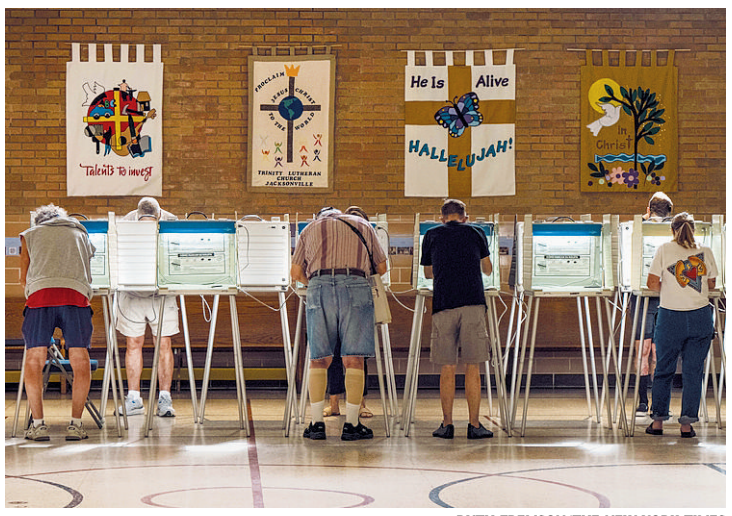

VOL. CLXXVI .... No. 61,058 + © 2026 The New York Times Company WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 4, 2026 Prices in Canada may be higher $4.00

Battles Linger as Nation Decides Control of Congress

DEMETRIUS FREEMAN FOR THE NEW YORK TIMES

VIRGINIA Voting at Main Street Station in Richmond. Senator Mark Warner, a Democrat, faced Bert Mizusawa, a retired general.

RUTH FREMSON/THE NEW YORK TIMES

FLORIDA Filling out ballots in Jacksonville. In a Senate race, the Republican incumbent, Ashley Moody, was facing Angie Nixon.

JAMIE KELTER DAVIS FOR THE NEW YORK TIMES

WISCONSIN Democrats were hoping to retain the governor's seat as David Crowley tried to defeat the Republican Tom Tiffany.

No End Is in Sight to Democrats' Israel Splits

By TIM BALK and JENNIFER MEDINA

The midterm elections ended, as they began, with Democrats fighting about Israel.

The debate returned to center stage late in the pivotal Senate race in Michigan, when Representative Haley Stevens, who lost the Democratic primary, pulled her endorsement from its winner, Dr. Abdul El-Sayed, citing his rhetoric on Israel, among other issues. She stunned and dismayed her fellow Democrats by endorsing the Republican nominee, Mike Rogers, a former congressman.

The surprising turn of events the weekend before the election suggested that the party's divisions over Israel were sure to endure after the new Congress is seated and the party lurches into a wide-open 2028 presidential primary.

Democratic lawmakers and candidates have become more critical of the Israeli government since the start of the war in Gaza, reflecting a broader shift in public opinion within the party. A New York Times/Siena poll found in May that three-quarters of Democratic voters opposed U.S. economic or military support for Israel. But the new, more critical stance has antagonized other members of the Democratic coalition, who have argued against moving too far from a close U.S. ally, and who have warned that criticisms of Israel have at times veered into antisemitism.

The party had hoped to table the debate going into Tuesday's elections. Instead, it came roaring back.

"It's an agonizing set of issues," said Brad Lander, a Jewish New York Democrat who won a House primary this year. Mr. Lander, who has accused the Israeli gov-

Continued on Page A11

Trump's Hunt for Illegal Voters Nets Little

By MADELEINE NGO

WASHINGTON — The Department of Homeland Security has mounted an extraordinary campaign to hunt for illegal voters, devoting hundreds of federal agents to the task of poring over tens of thousands of voter records and knocking on the doors of people suspected of being noncitizens who unlawfully cast ballots.

But the crusade has so far resulted in the Trump administration's charging only about 240 people with voting-fraud-related offenses across the country since the president took office, according to the Justice Department.

Latest Results

House and Senate races in a handful of battleground states remained tight into Election Day. Coverage at nytimes.com.

That includes some noncitizens accused of registering to vote but not actually casting ballots.

The figure is a minuscule share of the more than 158 million ballots cast in the 2024 general election, and falls far short of the figures cited in July by Markwayne Mullin, the homeland security secretary, who claimed without evidence that more than 250,000 potential noncitizens were registered to vote in just four states alone.

The small number of charges has further undermined President Trump's specious claims that voting by noncitizens is pervasive and tilting elections for Democrats, and raises questions about why the Homeland Security Department has dedicated vast resources to the effort ahead of the midterm election.

Continued on Page A11

Hochul Fends Off a Trump Ally To Capture a Second Full Term

By BENJAMIN ORESKES

Gov. Kathy Hochul, a Democrat whose folksy, centrist approach has helped her forge relationships with leaders as disparate as President Trump and Mayor Zohran Mamdani, won a second full term as governor of New York on Tuesday, according to The Associated Press.

Ms. Hochul, the state's first female governor, defeated Bruce Blakeman, the Nassau County executive, a Republican who is a longtime friend of Mr. Trump's. Their alliance proved auspicious for Ms. Hochul, a Buffalo native who spent months bashing her opponent for supporting the Trump administration's policies.

But Ms. Hochul, 68, has also displayed an ability to work with the president, despite their profound differences. She worked with the Trump administration on new energy projects, including the jump-starting of several stalled natural gas pipeline projects, and has looked for moments to influence the administration's immigration enforcement in the state.

At the same time, the governor

Continued on Page A13

U.S. Debates Israeli Claim of Iran Chemical Arms

Some See a Warning as a Ploy by Netanyahu; Others See a Risk

This article is by Julian E. Barnes*,* Natan Odenheimer*,* Eric Schmitt*,* Adam Rasgon and Dustin Volz*.*

WASHINGTON — Israel has shared intelligence with the United States asserting that Iran is considering the use of chemical weapons against its adversaries, information met with alarm by some American officials and deep skepticism by others, according to U.S. and regional officials.

Some American officials see the Israeli intelligence as part of a pressure campaign by Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu's government to persuade the Trump administration to return to major combat operations against Iran.

Other officials believe that the threats should be taken seriously, given the recent array of warnings about Iran's preparations to attack American interests.

Israel has shared some of the information with officials in Persian Gulf countries. Several doubted Iran was developing plans to use chemical weapons and believe Israel is trying to push the United States and its partners to return to a more intense phase of the war.

American claims about Iran's chemical weapons, or its intent to build them, go back decades. In 2003, Iran acknowledged it had developed chemical capabilities during the Iran-Iraq war in the

Continued on Page A9

WILLIAM D. NORDHAUS, 1941-2026

Nobelist Put a Price on Pollution, Swaying Policy

By LYDIA DePILLIS

William D. Nordhaus, a Yale economist and Nobel laureate who tabulated the economic wreckage of carbon emissions and influenced climate policy across several presidential administrations, died on Friday at his home in New Haven, Conn. He was 85.

The cause was glioblastoma, an aggressive form of brain cancer, according to a statement from Yale University.

In 2018, Professor Nordhaus shared the Nobel in economic science with Paul M. Romer, an economist at New York University. The Nobel committee cited Professor Nordhaus's work in developing a method to balance climate change's long-term damage with the costs required to contain it.

The model, which Professor Nordhaus refined over decades, has underpinned dozens of regulations around the world aimed at limiting fossil fuels and seeded the ground for a new field of research that bridges the gap between economics and earth science.

"He played a crucial role in terms of bringing consideration of the natural environment into the mainstream of economics, whereas earlier, it was sort of a fringe area," said Robert Stavins, director of the environmental economics program at Harvard.

Professor Nordhaus saw cli-

Continued on Page A24

INTERNATIONAL A4-9

Cuba Vows to Outlast Trump
The White House is carrying out the most intense pressure campaign on the island in decades. An official says its plan is simply to endure. PAGE A6

BUSINESS B1-5

Anthropic's Quest for Power
The company went on a deal spree with tech giants, former crypto miners and others to satisfy its artificial intelligence ambitions. PAGE B1

SPORTS B6-9

Quest to Make Football Safer
Researchers are exploring novel methods to treat, or even prevent, the brain disease C.T.E. One of the most surprising is near-infrared light. PAGE B6

FOOD D1-8

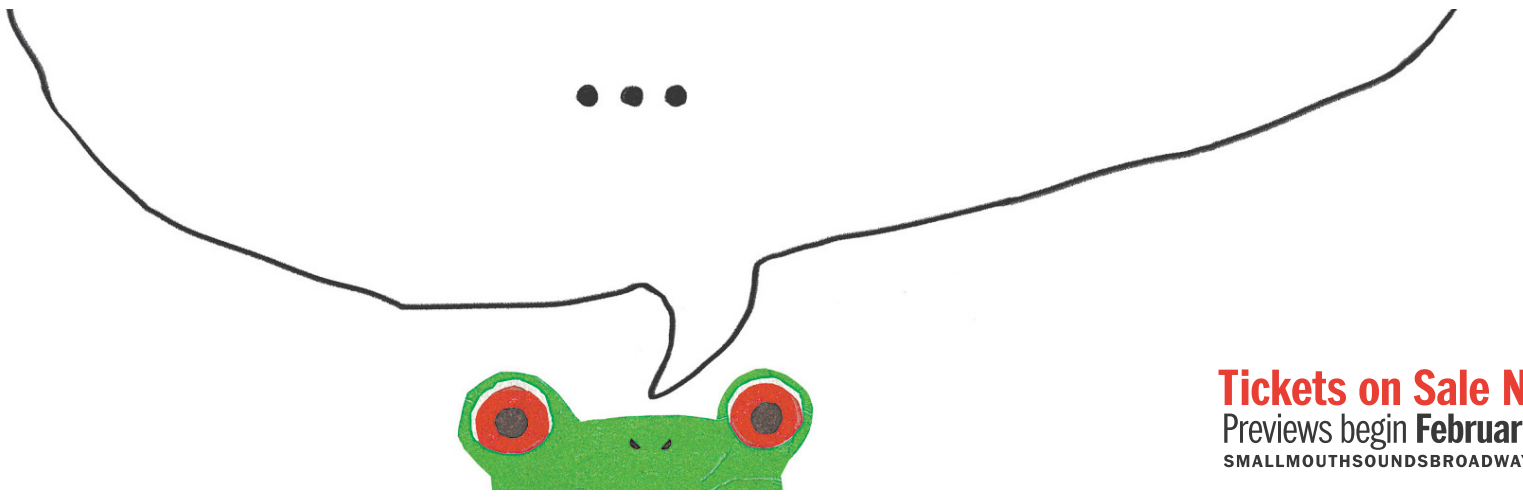

Uniformity on the Menu
Some critics say that Sysco, the giant food distributor, is homogenizing American dining, turning every restaurant into the same restaurant. PAGE D1

OPINION A22-23

Anna Merlan PAGE A22

0 354613 9

Julia Roberts
Paul Rudd
Sarah Paulson
Martin Freeman
Greta Lee
Isaac Powell
"Small Mouth Sounds"
a play by
Bess Wohl
directed by Joe Mantello

Tickets on Sale Now
Previews begin February 10
SMALLMOUTHSOUNDSBROADWAY.COM